

Teaching in the international Classroom, from a student and teachers perspective

In this workshop, UU and VU students and two teachers (Cha-Hsuan Liu, Utrecht University and Joanne Mol, University of Leiden) share their experiences from the international classroom.

What do they encounter? What are the problems, but also the benefits of an international environment are discussed.

Is the international classroom only about teaching in English or is there more to internationalization? And how did these teachers approach and students experience this?

And do the students experience that they have better intercultural competences and are more aware internationally?

At the end of this workshop you can, of course, start the discussion.
